

Should I buy the best ups?

These days many of us are working from home, so buying the best UPS your budget can stretch to is even more important. You may find that you're plugging in a lot more power-hungry devices into your home power supply, and this could lead to power cuts or power surges.

How to choose an ups?

There are many aspects to consider when choosing a UPS and you should define the systems for which the UPS will be used in your company. The output power of the selected UPS should be 20 - 25 % higher than the total power consumption of the connected systems. The more systems connected to the UPS, the shorter the bridging time.

Should I Choose an online UPS?

If there is power up to 20KW, i.e. for large server rooms and data centers, you should opt for an online UPS. This also applies to sensitive devices that require a continuous power supply. This is just a recommendation when choosing a UPS. If you are unsure which UPS is the right one for your application, you can contact us.

Should I buy a ups for my home?

You may find that you're plugging in a lot more power-hungry devices into your home power supply, and this could lead to power cuts or power surges. Your home likely won't have the power backup solutions that your office does, so buying a UPS for your home could be a very wise investment.

What is the bridging time of an ups?

The output power of the selected UPS should be 20 - 25 % higher than the total power consumption of the connected systems. The more systems connected to the UPS, the shorter the bridging time. The bridging time is the period during which the UPS can continue to supply power to the systems evenly in the event of a power failure.

Which APC ups are best for home use?

This is another great UPS from APC, and with the BE600M1, the company has created a UPS device that is ideal for home use. That's thanks to its small and unobtrusive design, and it offers enough power for smaller devices, such as home NAS drives, routers, and gaming consoles.
